ai.moms™

100 PROMPTS · RCTF METHOD

ai.moms™ Prompt Library

For the mom at home, the mom at work and the mompreneur. Copy the block, fill in the pink, paste it in.

START HERE

How to use this library

The form, the dinner, the note to your team, the follow-up you owe a customer. This library gives you 100 of those jobs as prompts you can run tonight. Many come from the ai.moms™ plugin, the playbooks behind Aime, your AI Chief Everything Officer™.

1. Find your moment. Every prompt opens with "Use it when," a scene from a real day. Start with your section, though you may be all three moms by Thursday.
2. Copy the whole block. Everything in the navy box goes in together, from Role to the end of Format.
3. Fill in the pink. Swap each [pink bracket] for your own details. You can talk instead of typing, and rambling is fine. If a bracket doesn't fit your family, delete it or write "not sure."
4. Paste it into your AI assistant. These prompts are written for Claude, Anthropic's AI assistant, and any similar assistant.
5. Read it, then fix it. Tell it what's off and ask again. It recommends, you decide. Nothing goes out until you've read it.

What RCTF means

Every prompt has the same four parts. It's the method we teach in our Foundations course, and it gives your assistant what it needs to be useful the first time.

R
Role
Who the assistant should be for this job.

C
Context
What it needs to know about your life. Most of your pink lives here.

T
Task
The job, stated plainly, with the rules it has to follow.

F
Format
How you want the answer back, so you can use it right away.

Once you know the four parts, you can write your own. Prompt 46, The One-Job Assistant, builds one with you.

Three labels you'll see

Web search Turn on web search first. If your assistant can't search, the prompt tells it to say so.

Photo You can attach a picture instead of typing. Crop out names first.

For your professional Organizes your questions for a doctor, lawyer, accountant or other pro. It never gives the advice.

READ THIS FIRST

Before you paste

Run the babysitter test: if you wouldn't hand it to a babysitter, don't hand it to AI.

Keep out of every prompt

- Full names
- Exact birthdays
- School plus schedule together
- Passwords, ID numbers and account numbers
- Client names and anything confidential from work. Check your employer's AI rules first.

Fine to use

- First initials
- Ages and grades
- Your town, when a search needs it
- Allergies, and what a sitter would need to know

Pasting an email or a screenshot? Take the names out first. The pink brackets remind you where.

Check every answer	AI gets things wrong, and it can sound sure while it does. Read every answer. Check dates, prices, places and anything touching an allergy before you act on it.
Doctors, lawyers, accountants	Medical, legal, tax and money prompts here organize your questions for a professional. They never give the advice. A worrying symptom is a call to your pediatrician or 911, never a question for AI.
Parenting stays yours	AI gets the lists, the forms and the plans. It isn't a co-parent, and decisions about your kids stay with you.
Your privacy settings	Open your assistant's settings and see what it keeps and what it learns from. Change anything you don't want.
When it's more than a hard week	These prompts are for logistics and ordinary hard days. If you're carrying more than that, please talk to your doctor or a therapist. In the US, you can call or text 988 at any hour.

This library helps you organize and draft. It isn't medical, legal, tax or financial advice. © 2026 ai.moms™

CONTENTS

Find your moment

The mom at home

Out of Your Head

1 The Everything Dump 7
2 The Load List 7
3 The 30-Day Sweep 8
4 The Bedtime Close-Down 8

Dinner

5 The Fridge Photo Dinner 9
6 The Five-Dinner Week 9
7 The Aisle-by-Aisle List 10
8 The Practice-Night Dinners 10
9 One Dinner, Two Eaters 11
10 The Lunchbox Rotation 11

School

11 The School Email Digest 12
12 The School Calendar Pull 12
13 The Form Walkthrough 13
14 The Teacher Email 13
15 The Conference Questions 14
16 The Support Meeting Questions 14

Birthdays, Holidays and Gifts

17 The Party Run of Show 15
18 The Holiday Backward Plan 15
19 The Gift List 16
20 The Teacher and Coach Gifts 16
21 The Hosting Timeline 17

Sick Days and Days Off

22 The Sick-Day Morning 17
23 The Pediatrician Questions 18
24 The Day-Off Map 18
25 The One-Text Swap 19
26 The Break Week Plan 19

The Week Ahead

27 The Week Ahead Plan 20
28 Today on One Page 20
29 The Two-Places Fix 21
30 The Forwardable Week 21
31 The Friday Close-Out 21

Weekends and Summer

32 The Weekend Finder 22
33 The Summer Map 22
34 The Camp Shortlist 23
35 The Camp Deadline Calendar 23

Family Trips

36 The Where-to-Go Shortlist 24
37 The Trip Countdown 24
38 The Packing List That Knows Your Kids 25

Sharing the Load

39 The Partner Talk Prep 25
40 The Whole-Job Handoff 26
41 The Solo Mom Triage 26
42 The Easy-Yes Ask 27
43 The Backup List 27

Playbooks

44 The Sitter Sheet 28
45 The Routine Playbook 28
46 The One-Job Assistant 29

Bills and Home Admin

47 The Year of Home Admin 29
48 The Bill Call Prep 30

Time for You

49 The Hidden Hours Finder 30
50 The Guilt Check 31

The mom at work

The Inbox

51 The Inbox Cut 33
52 The Reply You Keep Avoiding 33
53 The Long Thread Catch-Up 34
54 The Back-at-Work Catch-Up 34
55 The Boss Update 34

Meetings

56 The Ten-Minute Prep 35
57 The Rehearsal 35
58 The Notes-to-Next-Steps 36
59 The Meeting Audit 36

Protecting Your Time

60 The No, Three Ways 36
61 The Hard Stop 37
62 The Deadline Reset 37
63 The Pattern Talk 37
64 The Flexibility Request 38
65 The Big-Day Sick Call 38

Wins, Reviews and Your Next Move

66 The Friday Wins Line 39
67 The Receipts Rebuild 39
68 The Self-Assessment 40
69 The Promotion Case 40
70 The Interview Story 41
71 The Leave and Return Questions 41

Keeping Pace with AI

72 The Job Hand-Off Map 42
73 The 20-Minute Lesson 42
74 The Plain-English Explainer 43
75 The AI Policy Questions 43

The mompreneur

The One Hour

76 The One Hour Tonight 45
77 The Notes App Rescue 45
78 The Business Week 45
79 The Business Friday Sweep 46

Your Offer and Your Words

80 The Interview-First Draft 46
81 The One-Sentence Offer 46
82 The About Page 47
83 The Real-Questions FAQ 47
84 The Customer Conversation Script 47

Customers

85 The Follow-Up 48
86 The Late-Invoice Note 48
87 The Simple Proposal 49
88 The Review Ask 49
89 The Hard Customer Reply 49

Getting Seen

90 The Customer-Question Post 50
91 The Month of Post Ideas 50
92 One Recording, Four Pieces 51
93 The Newsletter Note 51
94 The Launch Backward Plan 51

Playbooks and Help

95 The Client Onboarding Playbook 52
96 The Helper Brief 52
97 The Customer Reply Assistant 53
98 The Scope-Creep Reply 53

Questions for Your Pros

99 The Accountant Questions 54
100 The Lawyer Questions 54

ai.moms™

50 PROMPTS

The mom at home

The calendars, the meals, the school forms, the birthdays. The invisible load, written down and handed over.

Out of Your Head	4
Dinner	6
School	6
Birthdays, Holidays and Gifts	5
Sick Days and Days Off	5
The Week Ahead	5
Weekends and Summer	4
Family Trips	3
Sharing the Load	5
Playbooks	3
Bills and Home Admin	2
Time for You	2

Out of Your Head

4 prompts

1 The Everything Dump

The mom at home · Out of Your Head

Use it when: You've been holding the form, the gift and the dentist call in your head since breakfast, and you're out of room.

Role: You are a calm, organized assistant who sorts a mom's messy stream of thoughts without commentary or judgment.

Context: I have [number of kids] kids, ages [your kids' ages]. Here is everything on my mind, in no order, half sentences included: [type or dictate all of it, the form, the gift, the worry, whatever is in there].

Task: Sort every item into four groups: Must do this week, Should do this week, On my radar, and Delegate or drop. Flag anything with a hard deadline. If something is a worry with no action attached, move it to its own short list so it doesn't sit on a to-do list. Don't lose a single item. Then pick the three that matter most right now and tell me why.

Format: Four headed lists with short bullets and deadlines in bold at the top of each. Then a list called Worries, not tasks. Then My top 3, one line of reason each. End by asking, "What else is in there?"

2 The Load List

The mom at home · Out of Your Head

Use it when: Someone said "just tell me what to do," and you realized the whole list exists only in your head.

Role: You are a neutral, organized helper who turns the invisible work of running a home into a plain written list. You don't judge anyone in my house, and you never compare who does more.

Context: Who lives in our home: [first initials and ages]. Outside help we have: [sitter, grandparent, cleaner, or none]. What I already know I carry: [anything you can list now, messy is fine].

Task: Walk me through one area at a time: kids' daily care, school and activities, food, home upkeep, money and paperwork, family and social life, holidays and gifts. For each area, name the common jobs, including the noticing, planning and remembering parts, and ask which ones are on my plate. Wait for my answer before moving on. When we finish, sort every job into three piles: AI can draft or plan it and I check it, someone else could own it start to finish, and only me.

Format: Three lists with one short line per job. No counts, tallies, percentages or comparisons between people, since this is for planning and never a scoreboard. End with one job from each pile to start with.

3 The 30-Day Sweep

The mom at home · Out of Your Head

Use it when: You just found out the swim forms were due yesterday, and now you're wondering what else is out there.

Role: You are a thorough household assistant who catches what falls through the cracks in a family's month.

Context: This month is [month]. Kids' ages: [your kids' ages]. Their activities: [activities]. Coming up in the next 30 days: [events, trips, season changes]. Things I've already handled: [anything you know is done].

Task: Run through what usually comes due for a family like mine in the next 30 days: clothes and shoes they've outgrown, seasonal gear, appointments, sign-ups, school needs, gifts, home and car upkeep, renewals. Keep only what fits my family and this time of year. Ask me nothing until you've shown me the list, then let me cross things off.

Format: A checklist grouped by area, one line per item, with a suggested do-by date. At the top, a section called This week with no more than 5 items.

4 The Bedtime Close-Down

The mom at home · Out of Your Head

Use it when: Everyone is finally asleep, and you're lying there running tomorrow.

Role: You are a quiet end-of-day assistant. You keep it short because I'm tired.

Context: Tomorrow I have: [what's on tomorrow, kids and work, first initials only]. What's still rattling around: [anything on your mind]. I wake up at [time].

Task: Take everything I just said and get it out of my head. Tell me what needs setting out tonight, what happens first tomorrow, and what can wait. If I've listed more than tomorrow can hold, pick what moves to later in the week.

Format: Three short lists: Tonight (5 minutes or less), First thing tomorrow, and Later this week. Under 100 words. End with one line telling me it's all written down and I can stop holding it.

Dinner

6 prompts

5 The Fridge Photo Dinner

The mom at home · Dinner · Photo

Use it when: It's 5:30, there's no plan, and someone just asked what's for dinner.

Role: You are a fast, practical home cook who works with what's already in the house.

Context: I've attached a photo of my fridge and the cabinet I cook from, or here's what I have: [attach a photo or list what's on hand]. I'm feeding [how many people, with ages]. Allergies and hard nos: [allergies, foods your kids refuse, or none]. I have [minutes until dinner]. Will I pass a store on the way home? [yes or no]

Task: Give me 2 or 3 dinners I can make right now, fastest first. Use only what you can see or what I listed, plus basics like oil and salt. If I'm passing a store, you can add up to 5 grab items. If you can't tell what something in the photo is, ask or leave it out. Keep every allergy on my list out of every option. Pasta, eggs, quesadillas and rice bowls all count as dinner.

Format: No intro. For each option: the name, total time, what it uses, then steps short enough to follow with one hand. If I reply "just pick," choose one.

6 The Five-Dinner Week

The mom at home · Dinner

Use it when: The store run is tomorrow, and you've made the same three dinners for a month.

Role: You are a family meal planner who plans for real weeknights and real kids.

Context: I'm feeding [how many people, with ages]. Allergies and hard nos: [allergies and refusals]. Dinners that reliably work: [3 to 5 favorites]. I want to cook [number] nights this week. Nights with activities: [which nights]. On a normal night I have [minutes] to cook. I shop at [your grocery store]. Our grocery budget is about [weekly amount]. Already in the house: [what you have].

Task: Plan the week's dinners matched to each night, with 20 minutes or less on activity nights. Reuse ingredients across the week so nothing goes bad. Add a picky-eater swap where it's needed. Build one grocery list of only what I need to buy. Keep every allergy on my list out of every option.

Format: A table with day, dinner, total time and swap. Then a simple recipe for any dinner that needs one, with ingredients and short steps. Then the grocery list by department, in the usual order of a grocery store.

7 The Aisle-by-Aisle List

The mom at home · Dinner

Use it when: You've got four recipes in four tabs and a list on the back of an envelope.

Role: You are an organized shopper who turns scattered recipes and notes into one clean list.

Context: Here's what I'm making: [paste recipes or links, or just name the dishes]. Here's what else we're out of: [your running list]. We already have: [what's in the house]. I'm feeding [how many people] and shopping at [your grocery store].

Task: Combine everything into one grocery list. Merge duplicates, add up the quantities, and take off what I already have. If a recipe needs something unusual that I'd only use once, flag it and suggest a swap.

Format: One list by department in the usual order of a grocery store, each item with its quantity. Then a short section called Check at home for anything you're unsure I have.

8 The Practice-Night Dinners

The mom at home · Dinner

Use it when: Practice ends at 6:45, everyone is starving in the car, and the drive-through is right there.

Role: You are a family cook who plans food around a car schedule.

Context: Activity nights: [days and times]. Who eats when: [for example, one kid at 4:45, the rest at 7]. I'm feeding [how many people, with ages]. Allergies and hard nos: [allergies and refusals]. What I own: [slow cooker, air fryer, thermos, or none of these].

Task: Give me 6 dinners built for these nights. Each one has to work when people eat at different times, or travel in a container, or be ready when we walk in. Tell me what can be done in the morning or the night before. Keep every allergy on my list out of every option.

Format: A numbered list. For each: the dinner, when to do the prep, how long it takes that day, and how it holds or travels. Finish with one backup that needs no prep at all.

9 One Dinner, Two Eaters

The mom at home · Dinner

Use it when: You're done making a second meal for the kid who eats four things.

Role: You are a practical family menu planner. You work with what my kids eat today. You don't advise me on how to get them to eat differently.

Context: What my kid or kids reliably eat: [the short list]. Hard nos: [foods refused]. Allergies: [allergies or none]. What the adults want more of: [what you miss eating]. Time to cook: [minutes].

Task: Give me 7 dinners where one cooking session feeds everyone. Each dinner has a base that all of us eat and one small change that makes it work for the adults or for the picky eater, such as keeping the sauce on the side. Keep every allergy on my list out of every option.

Format: A table with dinner, shared base, the small change and total time. Keep the steps out for now, and ask me which ones I'd like recipes for.

10 The Lunchbox Rotation

The mom at home · Dinner

Use it when: It's 9pm, the lunches still aren't made, and you can't face another turkey sandwich.

Role: You are a school-lunch planner who keeps it simple and repeatable.

Context: Kids' ages: [your kids' ages]. They'll eat: [foods that come home eaten]. They won't touch: [foods that come home uneaten]. School food rules: [nut-free, no heating, or anything else]. Allergies: [allergies or none]. Lunch has to pack in [minutes].

Task: Build a two-week lunch rotation that follows the school's rules. Reuse the same few ingredients and keep each lunch to a main, a fruit or vegetable, and a snack. Tell me what can be packed the night before and which lunches a kid could pack alone. Keep every allergy on my list out of every option.

Format: A two-week table by day. Below it, one shopping list covering both weeks. Add a line called Out of everything for the morning you open the fridge and have nothing.

11 The School Email Digest

The mom at home · School Photo

Use it when: Twelve unread school emails, and one of them has something that has to be bought by Thursday.

Role: You read school emails so I don't have to. You pull out only what I need to act on and leave the rest behind.

Context: Today is [today's date]. My kids are in [your kids' grades]. Here are this week's emails and class app screenshots: [paste them or attach them, with your child's full name and the school's name taken out].

Task: Pull out everything that needs action: what to sign, what to pay, what to pack or buy, what to show up for, and any change to dismissal or pickup. Include every date. Draft a one-line reply for anything I owe a response to. If two messages disagree, or a date looks off, tell me so I can check.

Format: Start with Due in 48 hours in bold, with pickup and dismissal changes at the very top. Then four short lists: Sign, Pay, Pack, Show up. Then dates written as calendar entries. Then the one-line replies. Then two lines total for everything else.

12 The School Calendar Pull

The mom at home · School Photo

Use it when: The year's calendar PDF has been sitting in your downloads since August.

Role: You turn a school calendar into dates a parent can use.

Context: Here's the calendar: [attach or paste it, with the school's name covered]. I work [your work days and hours]. Today is [today's date].

Task: Pull every no-school day, half day, early dismissal, conference, picture day, concert, testing week and break. Flag the ones that land on my work days, since those need coverage. If the file is hard to read, say which dates you're unsure of.

Format: A chronological list written as calendar entries: date, title, all day or time. Then a short list called Needs coverage. Mark anything unclear with "check this."

13 The Form Walkthrough

The mom at home · School Photo

Use it when: A six-page form came home in the backpack, and it's due tomorrow.

Role: You explain paperwork in plain English and tell me what I need before I start. You don't fill anything in for me.

Context: Here's the blank form, before I've written on it: [attach or paste the blank form, with the school's name covered]. It's for my child, age [your child's age].

Task: Tell me what this form is for, what I need to gather before I start, which sections apply to me, which I can skip, what needs a signature, when it's due and where it goes. If a section is medical or legal, say who I should ask about it and leave the answer to them.

Format: A checklist in three parts: Have ready, Fill in, Sign and send. One line per item. End with the one question most likely to trip me up.

14 The Teacher Email

The mom at home · School

Use it when: You've rewritten the note to the teacher three times, and it still sounds either annoyed or sorry.

Role: You are a clear writer who helps parents send warm, direct notes to teachers.

Context: My child is in [your child's grade]. What happened: [what's going on, in your own words]. What I want from this email: [a meeting, an answer, an update, or just letting them know]. How I want to sound: [warm, direct, concerned].

Task: Draft the email. Keep it to the facts I gave you and the one thing I'm asking for. Assume the teacher is on our side. Don't add opinions about my child or decide what the issue is. Leave the names as blanks for me to fill in.

Format: Two versions under 100 words, one warmer and one more direct, each with a subject line. Nothing else.

15 The Conference Questions

The mom at home · School

Use it when: Conferences are Thursday, you get 15 minutes, and you'll think of your real question in the parking lot.

Role: You help parents get the most out of a short meeting with a teacher. You don't assess my child. That's the teacher's job and mine.

Context: My child is in [your child's grade]. What I've noticed at home: [homework, friends, mood about school, whatever comes to mind]. Notes or reports from school: [paste anything, with names taken out]. What I most want to know: [your biggest question].

Task: Help me use the time well. Write my top 5 questions and put them in order, with the one I'd regret skipping first. Make one of the 5 a question about what's going well. Tell me what's worth bringing.

Format: One screen I can read in the hallway: the 5 questions, what to bring, and a blank notes section with What I heard and What happens next.

16 The Support Meeting Questions

The mom at home · School For your professional

Use it when: The school wants to meet about your child's learning support, and the packet is full of words you've never seen.

Role: You help parents organize for a school support meeting. You explain terms in plain language and build a question list. You don't give legal or medical advice, and you don't tell me what my child should get.

Context: My child is in [your child's grade]. Meeting date: [date]. Here's the paperwork: [paste it, with names, birthdate, ID numbers and the school's name taken out]. What I've seen at home: [your notes]. What I hope comes out of this: [your goals].

Task: List the terms and acronyms in plain language. Organize my notes. Write the questions I should ask the school team, grouped by topic. Mark any question that may need an advocate, attorney or doctor. Don't tell me what the law requires or what decision to make.

Format: Four sections: Words to know, My notes, My questions, Bring with me. Add a reminder that I can ask for time before I sign or agree to anything.

17 The Party Run of Show

The mom at home · Birthdays, Holidays and Gifts

Use it when: The birthday is five weeks out, and all you have is a theme your kid changes daily.

Role: You are a party producer for real families. You plan the whole thing so the host gets to be at it.

Context: The party is for a [age]-year-old on [date, time window]. Where: [home, park, venue]. Guests: about [number of kids and adults]. Theme or interests: [what your kid is into right now]. Budget: [amount]. Food allergies I know of: [allergies or not sure yet]. Who's helping: [names as first initials, or just me].

Task: Plan it start to finish. Work backward from the date: what happens two weeks out, the week of, the night before and the morning of. Build an hour-by-hour run of show with activities that fit the age. Plan the food with amounts. Ask about anything this party clearly needs that I haven't mentioned, like a rain plan or asking parents about allergies, but only once, after you've given me the plan. Keep every allergy on my list out of every option.

Format: Four parts: Prep timeline, Run of show, Food and shopping list, Cleanup. Then two small touches this kid would remember. Add invitation text I can copy.

18 The Holiday Backward Plan

The mom at home · Birthdays, Holidays and Gifts

Use it when: Everyone keeps asking what the plan is for the holidays, and you're the one who's supposed to know.

Role: You are a holiday planner for a family that wants the good parts without the scramble.

Context: We celebrate: [your holidays, with dates]. Traditions that matter to us: [the ones you'd keep]. Hosting or traveling: [plans]. Kids' ages: [your kids' ages]. Total budget: [amount]. Work and school dates that affect this: [days off, concerts, deadlines]. Today is [today's date].

Task: Work backward from the first date and give every job a week: gifts, food, travel, cards, school events, the traditions I named. Spot the weeks that are overloaded and move what you can. Then give me a drop list of 5 things I could skip this year.

Format: A week-by-week checklist from now through the last holiday, one line per job. Then The drop list. Then Could someone else own this? with any jobs that could go to another person, start to finish.

19 The Gift List

The mom at home · Birthdays, Holidays and Gifts

Use it when: You know every size in the house, and nobody else could buy a single gift.

Role: You are a gift planner who keeps one clear list and gets things bought on time.

Context: What I'd like: [a few things you'd enjoy]. Who I buy for: [first initials, relationship, age, what they're into, sizes if useful]. Occasion: [holiday, birthdays this season]. Budget: [total or per person]. Already bought: [anything done]. Last order date I care about: [date].

Task: Build one gift list. Suggest 2 ideas per person inside the budget, and flag who's still missing a gift. Put me on the list too, and write two ideas I can send to whoever's asking. Skip brand-name picks unless I gave you one. If you name a product or price, tell me to check it.

Format: A table: who, idea 1, idea 2, budget, bought, wrapped. Below it, a short text I can send with my two ideas. End with a version of the list I can paste back in next time.

20 The Teacher and Coach Gifts

The mom at home · Birthdays, Holidays and Gifts

Use it when: The group chat asked who's doing the teacher gift, and you just remembered the coach, the bus driver and the piano teacher.

Role: You are a thoughtful, practical gift planner for all the people who help with my kids.

Context: People I want to thank: [roles, like teacher, coach, aide, bus driver]. Occasion: [holiday, end of year, thank-you week]. Budget: [per person or total]. Group gifts in play: [any class collection]. My kids can help with: [notes, drawings, or nothing this year].

Task: Give me a simple plan for every person on the list, with one idea each that fits the budget. Write a short thank-you note for each one that I can copy and personalize. If a group gift is going around, draft my reply to the group chat.

Format: A table with person, gift, cost and when to get it. Then the notes, 2 sentences each, with blanks for names. Then the group chat reply, if I need one.

21 The Hosting Timeline

The mom at home · Birthdays, Holidays and Gifts

Use it when: You said yes to hosting, and 14 people are coming Saturday.

Role: You are an experienced home host who plans backward from the moment guests arrive.

Context: The event: [what and when]. Guests: [number of adults and kids]. Allergies and diets: [what you know]. My kitchen and time: [oven space, what you can cook, how much time you have before]. What I always make: [your go-tos]. Budget: [amount]. What people have offered to bring: [offers].

Task: Plan a menu I can pull off, with as much as possible done ahead. Write one shopping list. Build a timeline that works backward from when guests arrive. Give me a list of real answers for when someone asks what they can bring. Keep every allergy on my list out of every option.

Format: Four parts: Menu, Shopping list by department, Timeline starting days ahead and ending at the doorbell, and What to tell people to bring. Add a short text I can send to the group with arrival time and what to bring.

Sick Days and Days Off

5 prompts

22 The Sick-Day Morning

The mom at home · Sick Days and Days Off

Use it when: It's 7am, a kid is home sick, and the day you planned just disappeared.

Role: You are a steady logistics assistant for a sick-day morning. You are not a medical professional. You don't diagnose, and you don't suggest medicine or treatment. Your only health job is the urgent line in the Task.

Context: My child, [first initial], age [your child's age], is staying home today: [short note on what's going on]. What's on my day: [meetings, deadlines, pickups, appointments]. Who needs to know: [school, manager, team, clients]. Who might help: [partner, grandparent, sitter, or nobody]. What can move and what can't: [your read].

Task: If anything I wrote could be urgent, such as trouble breathing, a seizure, being hard to wake, signs of dehydration, any fever in a baby under 3 months or a high fever in a young child, put a first line telling me to call the pediatrician or 911 before anything else. Then write the school absence note, the messages to work and a text to whoever might help, with zero over-apologizing. Keep health details out of the work messages. Rebuild my day and say what moves and what drops. Add a low-key plan for the day at home.

Format: Any urgent line goes above everything. Then four headed parts: School note, Work messages and help text, My new day, Quiet day at home (activities only). Every message ready to copy, with blanks for names. Nothing goes out until I've read it.

23 The Pediatrician Questions

The mom at home · Sick Days and Days Off For your professional

Use it when: It's day three of the same cough, and you'll forget everything the second the doctor walks in.

Role: You help a parent get organized for a doctor's visit. You don't diagnose, reassure or give medical advice.

Context: My child is [your child's age]. What I've noticed, with rough dates: [symptoms, sleep, eating, what changed]. What we've tried: [anything]. What worries me most: [your biggest question]. Appointment is [date and time, or "calling today"].

Task: Turn my notes into a short timeline. Write the questions I should ask, with my biggest worry first. List what the doctor may ask so I can have it ready. Don't tell me what this might be or what to do about it. If anything sounds urgent, tell me to call the office now, or 911 if it can't wait.

Format: One page I can read at the visit: Timeline, My questions, Have ready. Leave a blank section called What the doctor said.

24 The Day-Off Map

The mom at home · Sick Days and Days Off

Use it when: There are six no-school days before spring, and you have coverage for none of them.

Role: You are a family logistics planner who finds coverage for days off before they turn into emergencies.

Context: No-school days and half days coming up: [paste the dates]. Kids' ages: [your kids' ages]. My work: [days, hours, what can flex]. Other adults: [who works when, or just me]. Options we have: [grandparent, sitter, swaps with friends, day camp, working from home]. Budget per day if we pay for care: [amount].

Task: Go date by date and propose coverage for each one. Mark which days could take a light work schedule and which can't. Spread out the favors so I'm not asking the same person every time. Flag the day that's hardest to solve.

Format: A table: date, kids home, my work that day, proposed coverage, backup. Then a list of what I need to ask or book, in order, with a do-by date for each.

25 The One-Text Swap

The mom at home · Sick Days and Days Off

Use it when: School's closed Wednesday, you work Wednesday, and you're already doing the math.

Role: You write short, warm texts between parents that are easy to say yes to.

Context: The day: [date and hours needed]. My kid: [first initial, age]. What I can offer in return: [a day I can take theirs, a pickup, dinner].

Task: Write the text. Say exactly what I need, for how long, and what I'll do in return. Make it easy to say no so nobody feels cornered.

Format: Three versions, two sentences each: one for a close friend, one for someone I barely know, one for the group chat. Leave a blank where names go.

26 The Break Week Plan

The mom at home · Sick Days and Days Off Web search

Use it when: Break is three weeks out, work doesn't stop, and the good camps are filling.

Role: You are a family planner who covers a school break day by day and finds real local options.

Context: Break dates: [dates]. Kids' ages and interests: [ages and what they like]. Town: [your town or nearest city]. My work during break: [days and hours]. Help we have: [who and which days]. Trip plans: [any days away]. Budget for care: [amount].

Task: Map every day of the break. Find camps or programs near me that fit the ages and cover my work hours. Search the web for current information and check dates, hours and prices on each place's own page. If you can't search, say so and tell me what to search for instead. Don't name camps from memory, leave the comparison blank for me to fill in, and skip your pick. If a date or price is from a past year, say so. Never invent a place, an event or a price, and mark anything I should confirm by phone. For days I don't need camp, suggest a low-effort plan.

Format: A day-by-day table with coverage for each day. Then a comparison of up to 4 camps: dates, hours, ages, cost, lunch, how to register, deadline, drive time. Tell me which you'd pick and why. You recommend, I decide.

The Week Ahead

5 prompts

27 The Week Ahead Plan

The mom at home · The Week Ahead

Use it when: It's Sunday night, and Monday already has three pickups and a form due.

Role: You are a chief of staff for a family. You look at the whole week, catch what collides and bring me a fix with every problem.

Context: Here's next week: [paste your calendar or describe it day by day, with first initials and no school names]. Who's in our home: [first initials and ages]. Our week runs: [Monday to Friday, shifts, custody schedule, whatever is true]. Birthdays or events in the next two weeks: [events]. We're low on: [supplies and groceries].

Task: Plan the next 7 days. Flag every conflict, with a proposed fix for each one. Suggest a simple dinner for each night matched to how full that night is. List what to bring, wear or buy for each event. Find one block in the week that's just for me and give it a real name.

Format: One brief I could screenshot: the week day by day, Conflicts and fixes, Dinners, Events, one Buy list, and My block. Keep each day to 3 lines or fewer.

28 Today on One Page

The mom at home · The Week Ahead

Use it when: The coffee's brewing, and the day already has three things in it that can't move.

Role: You are a morning assistant. You turn my day into something I can read before the coffee is done.

Context: Today is [day and date]. Everything on today: [paste your calendar or list it, work and kids together, first initials only]. Also due today: [forms, payments, RSVPs]. On my mind: [anything else].

Task: Pick my top 3 for today across work and family, and only 3. Find anything that collides and draft the fix, such as the carpool text or the message moving a meeting by 30 minutes. Point out the one meeting or moment that needs me sharpest.

Format: Short enough to read in the pickup line. Top 3, Due today in bold, Collisions and fixes with the drafted message, then the day in time order.

29 The Two-Places Fix

The mom at home · The Week Ahead

Use it when: The 4pm call and the 4:15 pickup are sitting on the same line of your calendar.

Role: You are a practical problem-solver for family scheduling conflicts.

Context: The conflict: [what, when, where]. What can't move: [your read]. What might move: [your read]. Who could help: [people, as first initials or roles]. Drive times: [rough times].

Task: Give me 3 ways to solve it, starting with the one that takes the least asking. For each one, write the exact message I'd send.

Format: A numbered list. Each option has one line on how it works, one line on the downside, and the message ready to copy. Then tell me which you'd go with. You recommend, I decide.

30 The Forwardable Week

The mom at home · The Week Ahead

Use it when: Grandma has Tuesday pickup, the sitter has Thursday, and you're about to type it all out twice.

Role: You turn a family plan into a short, friendly note that sounds like me.

Context: The plan: [paste your week, with first initials and no school names]. Who it's for: [partner, co-parent, sitter, grandparent]. What they need to know: [their pickups, handoffs, meals, gear]. How I talk to them: [playful, plain, formal]. A line I'd write myself: [a sample text in your voice].

Task: Pull out only the logistics that involve this person. Write them as a note from me, by day. Leave out everything else. It should sound like a text from a person, never a task list from HR.

Format: A message under 120 words that's ready to paste into a text or email, with times in bold. Add a one-line ask at the end to confirm.

31 The Friday Close-Out

The mom at home · The Week Ahead

Use it when: It's Friday at 4, and three unanswered emails are about to follow you into the weekend.

Role: You close out the week for me so the weekend can start clean.

Context: This week I got done: [what happened, big and small]. Still open: [unanswered emails, RSVPs, forms, calls, half-finished things]. Monday looks like: [the first things on Monday].

Task: Sort the open items into what has to move to next week and what can simply end here. Limit the first group to 5. Write any two-minute replies so I can send them now. Decide the first thing Monday-me should do.

Format: Three short lists: Done this week, Moves to next week, and Ends here. Then the drafted replies. Then First thing Monday. Close with one plain line telling me the weekend is for us.

Weekends and Summer

4 prompts

32 The Weekend Finder

The mom at home · Weekends and Summer Web search

Use it when: Saturday's wide open, the forecast is a coin flip, and the kids are bored already.

Role: You find what's actually happening near a family this weekend and match it to their kids.

Context: Town: [your town or nearest city]. Dates: [this Saturday and Sunday, with dates]. Kids' ages and what they like: [ages and interests]. Free windows: [times]. How far we'll drive: [minutes]. Budget: [free only, or an amount].

Task: Find 3 to 5 things to do, ranked for this family. Look at the library, rec programs, museums and their free days, farms, markets, open gyms, festivals and trails. Search the web for current information and check dates, hours and prices on each place's own page. If you can't search, say so and tell me what to search for instead. Don't list events or hours from memory. Never invent a place, an event or a price, and mark anything I should confirm by phone.

Format: A pick list with no more than 5 options, free ones flagged first. For each: when, where, drive time, rough cost, why it fits, and whether I need tickets, with the link. Add one rain backup.

33 The Summer Map

The mom at home · Weekends and Summer

Use it when: School ends in June, and you have a whole summer of coverage to build out of parts.

Role: You are a summer planner. You treat the summer as what it is: weeks of coverage assembled from parts.

Context: Last day of school: [date]. First day back: [date]. Kids' ages: [your kids' ages]. My work: [days, hours, any weeks off]. Other adults' schedules: [if any]. Trips and family visits: [dates]. Weekly care budget: [amount].

Task: Map every week of the summer for each kid. Mark each week as full-day coverage needed, partial or none, and show which weeks are still open. Point out gaps that are easy to miss, like the week between the end of camp and the start of school.

Format: A week-by-week table with a column for each kid, plus columns for My work and Status. Then a list of open weeks in order of what to solve first. Ask if I'd like the grid as something I can paste into a spreadsheet.

34 The Camp Shortlist

The mom at home · Weekends and Summer Web search

Use it when: You have nine camp websites open, and you can't remember which one had extended care.

Role: You research real summer camps and put the facts side by side so a parent can compare them.

Context: Town: [your town or wherever you'll be]. Kid and age: [first initial, age]. What they loved or hated about last year: [ask them tonight and write it here]. What they want more of: [their words]. Weeks needed: [dates]. Hours I need covered: [hours]. Budget per week: [amount].

Task: Find up to 6 camps that fit this kid and these weeks. Pull the session weeks, daily hours, extended care and what it costs, age range, price per week, sibling discount, lunch, when registration opens, whether it fills early and drive time. Search the web for current information and check dates, hours and prices on each place's own page. If you can't search, say so and tell me what to search for instead. Don't name camps from memory, leave the table blank for me to fill in, and skip the top picks. If a date or price is from a past year, say so. Never invent a place, an event or a price, and mark anything I should confirm by phone.

Format: A comparison table, one row per camp, with a link to each page. Below it, your top 2 picks and why. You recommend, I decide. Mark anything you couldn't confirm with "call to check."

35 The Camp Deadline Calendar

The mom at home · Weekends and Summer

Use it when: Registration for the camp everyone wants opens on a morning you can't remember.

Role: You keep a parent ahead of camp and activity deadlines.

Context: My camp picks and session dates: [paste your list]. Registration and payment details I've found: [dates, deposits, links]. Paperwork I know they need: [physical form, health form, swim test]. Friends we'd like to overlap with: [as first initials, or none]. Today is [today's date].

Task: Put every date in order: registration opens, deposits, final payments, forms due, sessions start and end. If a date is missing, list it as something to find out. Work out when I need to book any appointment a form requires. Write a short text to other moms asking which weeks they're doing.

Format: Dated calendar entries with a reminder a few days ahead of each. Then a Still need to find out list. Then the two-sentence text. I do the registering and paying myself.

Family Trips

3 prompts

36 The Where-to-Go Shortlist

The mom at home · Family Trips · Web search

Use it when: Everyone agrees you should go somewhere, and it's on you to figure out where.

Role: You are a family travel planner who gives honest tradeoffs and only suggests trips that fit these kids.

Context: Leaving from: [your city]. Dates and length: [when, how long]. Who's coming: [number of adults, kids' ages]. Budget: [total]. Trips we loved and hated: [past trips]. What doesn't work for us: [long flights, naps, stroller, food limits].

Task: Suggest 3 destinations that fit. For each one, give the honest tradeoff, such as travel time against what the kids can handle. Tell me the first thing to book. Use current information if you can search, and say where you're estimating.

Format: Three short profiles: why it fits, usual weather for our dates, door-to-door travel time, rough cost, the tradeoff, one thing the kids would remember. Then your pick and why. You recommend, I decide.

37 The Trip Countdown

The mom at home · Family Trips

Use it when: The trip is seven weeks out, and you just thought about the passports.

Role: You are a trip planner who works backward from departure so nothing lands on the last night.

Context: Trip: [where, dates, how we're getting there]. Who's going: [number of adults, kids' ages]. Already booked: [what's done]. Still to book: [what's left]. Staying behind at home: [pets, plants, mail, anything else]. School or work days we'll miss: [dates].

Task: Build a week-by-week list from today until we leave: bookings, documents, school notes, home prep and who covers what while we're gone. Write the absence note for school. Tell me to check passport and ID rules on the official government site, and don't state those rules as final.

Format: A checklist by week, one line per job, with the urgent ones at the top. Then the school note with blanks for names. I do all the booking and paying myself.

38 The Packing List That Knows Your Kids

The mom at home · Family Trips

Use it when: You're about to pack for four people at 11pm the night before.

Role: You write packing lists that are specific to one family and one trip.

Context: Trip: [where, how many nights]. Weather: [expected weather, or "not sure"]. Who's going: [first initials and ages]. Laundry there: [yes or no]. Bags: [carry-on only, checked, car]. Must-haves: [the stuffed animal, the white noise machine, the specific snack]. Special plans: [pool, hiking, nice dinner].

Task: Write a packing list for each person with real quantities based on the nights and laundry. Write the kids' lists so they, or another adult, can pack from them without me. Give the carry-on or car bag its own section.

Format: One checklist per person, then Carry-on or car bag, then Before we leave the house, for things like the charger on the nightstand. Short lines I can check off on my phone.

Sharing the Load

5 prompts

39 The Partner Talk Prep

The mom at home · Sharing the Load

Use it when: You've had this conversation in your head all week, and you'd like to have it out loud, calmly.

Role: You help me prepare for a calm conversation with my partner about how we share the work at home. You don't take sides, you don't judge my partner, and you never count who does more.

Context: What's been happening: [what's going on, in your words]. The one or two jobs I'd like to stop carrying: [jobs]. What my partner already owns: [jobs they handle]. What's going well: [something true]. When we could talk: [a calm time].

Task: Help me get ready. Pick the single thing to raise first. Write an opener that invites a conversation. Use two recent examples from what I wrote, stated as facts with no blame. If I didn't give any, leave blanks for me to fill in. Never make one up. Shape one clear request: my partner owns this job from start to finish, including the noticing. Give me calm answers to "just ask me" and "I do a lot too." If anything I wrote suggests I don't feel safe at home, drop the script and point me to the National Domestic Violence Hotline, 1-800-799-7233.

Format: One page: My opener, My one request, Two examples, If I hear this, How I'd close. No scores, tallies, percentages or lists of who did what. The conversation is mine to have, and this is only my prep.

40 The Whole-Job Handoff

The mom at home · Sharing the Load

Use it when: You keep "getting help" with the dentist appointments and you're still the one who remembers them.

Role: You write clear job descriptions for family jobs, so that one person can own a job from start to finish.

Context: The job: [one job, like appointments, school forms, the car, birthday gifts for cousins]. New owner: [who's taking it]. How I do it now: [talk it through, every step, including what you notice and remember]. Where things live: [apps, folders, drawers, with no passwords].

Task: Write up the whole job, including the parts nobody sees: noticing it needs doing, planning it, doing it, and following up. Say what done looks like. List what I'll stop doing so the handoff is real. Ask me up to 3 questions if a step is missing.

Format: A one-page handoff note, written warmly from me: What this job is, When it comes up, The steps, What done looks like, Where things live. Then a short line I can say when I hand it over.

41 The Solo Mom Triage

The mom at home · Sharing the Load

Use it when: It's just you, the list is the same size, and nobody's coming to take half.

Role: You help a solo mom shrink the list. You never assume a second adult exists.

Context: Kids' ages: [your kids' ages]. What I carry: [everything you can think of, in any order]. Work: [hours and what can flex]. People I could ask: [anyone, or nobody yet]. A little money I could spend to get time back: [weekly or monthly amount, or none].

Task: Sort each job into one of five groups: AI can draft or plan it, simplify it, pay for it within my budget, ask someone, or drop it for now. Be honest about what can go. Pick the 3 changes that would give me the most time back this month, and estimate the hours.

Format: Five short lists, then My 3 changes with the first step for each. Any hours are your estimate, so say so. Skip any pep talk.

42 The Easy-Yes Ask

The mom at home · Sharing the Load

Use it when: You could really use one dropped-off dinner this week, and you still haven't asked anyone.

Role: You write requests for help that are specific, small and easy to answer.

Context: What I need: [the exact help, like a meal or a ride, plus day, time, how long]. Who I'm asking: [who they are to you]. What I can offer back: [a return favor, or nothing right now]. Is this one time or weekly? [one time or standing].

Task: Draft the ask. Make it specific and bounded, with a clear end time, and give them an easy way to say no. If it's a standing need, shape it as a swap, like I take yours Thursdays and you take mine Tuesdays. Don't over-explain or over-apologize.

Format: Two versions: one for a direct text, one for the class group chat. Under 40 words each, with blanks for names.

43 The Backup List

The mom at home · Sharing the Load

Use it when: The school called at 1pm, you were 40 minutes away, and you realized there's no plan for that.

Role: You build simple backup plans for families and help moms make their first asks.

Context: Kids' ages: [your kids' ages]. How far I am during the day: [your rough drive time]. People I might be able to call: [roles or first initials, or nobody yet]. Where we most need backup: [sick pickup, late meeting, snow day].

Task: Build a backup list in call order, with who I'd try first, second and third for each situation. If I don't have enough people yet, give me the 3 lowest-stakes ways to start, such as offering a pickup first. Write the short message that asks someone to be on the list.

Format: A one-page list with blank lines for names and phone numbers that I'll fill in by hand and keep off AI. Then the message asking someone to be my backup. Remind me to add them to the school's approved pickup list myself.

Playbooks

3 prompts

44 The Sitter Sheet

The mom at home · Playbooks

Use it when: The sitter comes at 6, and you're about to explain bedtime out loud for the fourth time.

Role: You write one-page instructions a sitter can follow at 7pm with no one to ask.

Context: Kids: [first initials and ages]. What the evening looks like: [talk it through, dinner, screens, bath, bedtime]. House rules: [your rules]. Allergies and what the sitter should know: [allergies, only what a sitter needs]. The things that always go sideways: [the kid who stalls at teeth-brushing, the gate that sticks].

Task: Ask me one question at a time until the sheet is complete, aimed at the gaps that would make a new sitter fail, and stop after 6 questions at most. Then write it. Put the evening in time order. Tell the sitter what to do if something goes wrong. For health or allergy emergencies, use only the steps I give you, and always say to call 911 first, then me.

Format: A one-page sheet: The evening, House rules, Where things live, If something goes wrong. Leave blank lines for our address, phone numbers and doctor, which I'll fill in by hand after printing.

45 The Routine Playbook

The mom at home · Playbooks

Use it when: Everyone in this house asks you where the library books go on Thursdays, and you're the only one who knows.

Role: You turn a family routine into a playbook anyone can follow.

Context: The routine: [school morning, bedtime, trash night, packing for practice]. Who runs it now: [me, or someone else]. Who needs to be able to run it: [partner, grandparent, older kid, sitter]. Here's how it goes: [talk it through in any order].

Task: Ask up to 5 questions about the gaps that would make someone else get stuck: timing, the rule nobody says out loud, where things live, what to do when it goes sideways. Then write the playbook.

Format: One page: title, what it's for, who and when, numbered steps with times, what done looks like, and watch-outs. If a kid will use it, add a short checkbox version they can read.

46 The One-Job Assistant

The mom at home · Playbooks

Use it when: You've explained the same job to AI three times, and you wish it just knew.

Role: You help me set up a reusable assistant for one recurring job in my life.

Context: The job I want off my plate: [the job, like meal planning, gift tracking, camp research]. How often it comes up: [weekly, monthly, seasonally]. What good looks like: [an example of the result you want].

Task: Ask me one question at a time, and no more than 6, about what this assistant needs to know, what it should always do and what it should never do. Don't ask for sensitive details. Then write its instructions in four parts: Role, Context, Task and Format.

Format: One block of instructions I can paste into a Project or custom instructions. Then the first message to send it. Then 2 things to tell it the first time it gets something wrong.

Bills and Home Admin

2 prompts

47 The Year of Home Admin

The mom at home · Bills and Home Admin

Use it when: You found out the car registration expired from the ticket on your windshield.

Role: You are a household organizer who turns everything that recurs into one calendar.

Context: Our home: [rent or own, house or apartment]. Who needs regular appointments: [like me, my partner, a 6-year-old]. Cars and pets: [how many]. Renewals I can think of: [memberships, insurance, licenses, with no account numbers]. Yearly school and activity sign-ups: [sign-ups].

Task: Build a month-by-month list of the recurring jobs in our home: appointments, renewals, seasonal upkeep, sign-up windows, filters and batteries. Include what's common for a home like mine and mark those as suggestions. Spread the load so no month is a pile-up.

Format: Twelve short lists starting with next month, 3 to 6 items each. Then the 5 I should put on my calendar today, written as calendar entries.

48 The Bill Call Prep

The mom at home · Bills and Home Admin For your professional Photo

Use it when: The bill doesn't match what you were told, and you've been avoiding the phone call for two weeks.

Role: You help me get organized for a phone call about a bill. You don't give medical, insurance, legal or financial advice, and you don't tell me what I owe.

Context: Here's the bill or letter: [paste or attach it, with names, member IDs and account numbers taken out]. What I was told: [what you understood]. What doesn't make sense: [your question]. Who I need to call: [billing office, insurance, or not sure].

Task: Tell me in plain language what each line says, and mark any term I should ask about. List the questions to ask, in order. Tell me what to have in front of me. If you can't tell who I should call first, say so.

Format: One page: What this says, My questions, Have ready. Then a call log with blanks for date, who I spoke to, what they said, reference number and next step.

Time for You

2 prompts

49 The Hidden Hours Finder

The mom at home · Time for You

Use it when: Someone asked what you did for yourself this week, and you laughed.

Role: You find the time hiding in a mom's week and help her name one block that's hers.

Context: Here's a normal week: [paste your calendar or talk through it, first initials and no school names]. Things I do every week without thinking: [errands, reorders, standing commitments]. What I'd do with two free hours: [the real answer].

Task: Sort my week into kids, work, home, and everyone else's priorities. Find time I could get back: errands to batch, reorders to automate, commitments that stopped earning their place, jobs someone else could own. Then pick one weekly block that's mine.

Format: Short lists of what to batch, automate, drop or hand off, with the hours each one would give back, marked as your estimate. Then My block, with a day, a time and a real name for the calendar. Never call it "free."

50 The Guilt Check

The mom at home · Time for You

Use it when: You missed the class thing for a work call, and you've been replaying it all afternoon.

Role: You help me sort a guilty thought in under a minute. You are not a therapist, and you don't diagnose.

Context: What I keep replaying: [what happened]. What I'm telling myself about it: [the sentence in your head]. What else I did this week: [a few true things, big or small].

Task: Say back what I'm feeling in one sentence. Then sort it. If something specific needs attention, name it and give me one small next step. If it's an impossible standard talking, say that plainly. Finish with one true sentence from my actual week that I can carry forward. If this sounds heavier than a hard day, tell me kindly to talk with my doctor or a therapist. If I say anything about hurting myself or not wanting to be here, skip the rest and tell me to call or text 988 now.

Format: Three short paragraphs at the most. No lists, no pep talk, no advice about my kids.

ai.moms™

25 PROMPTS

The mom at work

The inbox, the meeting at 4, the review that needs a year of receipts, and the AI your team expects you to know.

The Inbox	5
Meetings	4
Protecting Your Time	6
Wins, Reviews and Your Next Move	6
Keeping Pace with AI	4

The Inbox

5 prompts

51 The Inbox Cut

The mom at work · The Inbox

Use it when: It's Monday at 9:05, there are 140 unread, and your first meeting is at 9:30.

Role: You are a sharp executive assistant. You cut my inbox down to what needs me today.

Context: My role: [your job in one line]. What matters most this week: [your priorities]. How I write: [short and warm, formal, a sample line]. Here are the emails: [paste subject lines and threads, with client names and anything confidential taken out].

Task: Sort everything into four groups: Needs my decision, Quick reply, Waiting on others, FYI or archive. Draft every quick reply in my voice, short and decisive with no over-explaining. Flag anything where my silence is costing me, like an unanswered ask or a slipping deadline.

Format: Four headed lists, one line per email. Then the drafted replies, ready to copy. End with The one that matters most today and why. I read and send everything myself.

52 The Reply You Keep Avoiding

The mom at work · The Inbox

Use it when: That email has been starred for nine days, and it's getting harder to answer by the hour.

Role: You are a clear, kind business writer who helps me answer the email I've been putting off.

Context: The email: [paste it, with client names and anything confidential taken out]. Why I've been avoiding it: [the real reason]. What I want to say: [the rough answer, in any words]. Who this is: [boss, peer, client, and how well you know them].

Task: Write the reply. Acknowledge the delay in a few words, with no long apology. Say the hard part clearly. End with what happens next.

Format: Two versions under 120 words, one warmer and one more direct. Then tell me which you'd send and why.

53 The Long Thread Catch-Up

The mom at work · The Inbox

Use it when: You stepped out for a pediatrician appointment, and now the thread has 31 replies with your name in it.

Role: You read long work threads and tell me only what I need to walk back in.

Context: My role on this: [what you own]. The thread: [paste it, with client names and anything confidential taken out].

Task: Tell me what was decided, what's still open, what people are asking of me, and who disagrees about what. If it looks like I'm expected to do something, quote the line that says so. Don't guess at anything that's unclear from the thread.

Format: Under 120 words: Decided, Still open and who disagrees, Asked of me. Then a draft reply that shows I'm caught up, under 60 words.

54 The Back-at-Work Catch-Up

The mom at work · The Inbox

Use it when: You're back after time out, and everyone assumes you've read everything.

Role: You help someone return to work with a plan for catching up.

Context: I was out [how long]. My role: [your job in one line]. What I know changed: [notes, announcements, anything you've heard]. My manager and key people: [roles only]. Here's what's waiting: [paste highlights, with client names and anything confidential taken out].

Task: Build my first week back. Tell me what to read first, who to talk to and what to ask each of them. Give me a short list of what I can ignore. Write the note I'd send to my team saying I'm back and what I'm picking up.

Format: A plan by day, Monday to Friday, with no more than 3 items a day. Then the questions for my manager. Then the team note, under 60 words, with no apology for having been away.

55 The Boss Update

The mom at work · The Inbox

Use it when: Your boss asked for a quick update, and you did about fifteen things this week.

Role: You turn a messy week of work into a short update a senior person will read.

Context: Who it's for: [your manager, their manager, a client]. What they care about: [results, risks, deadlines]. What I did: [dump all of it, with client names and anything confidential taken out]. What's stuck: [blockers].

Task: Pick what they'd care about. Lead with results and write them with the impact first. Say plainly where I need something from them. Don't inflate anything, and don't add numbers I didn't give you.

Format: Five lines or fewer: Done, Next, Need from you. Then a list of what you left out, so I can add anything back.

Meetings

4 prompts

56 The Ten-Minute Prep

The mom at work · Meetings

Use it when: You have ten minutes and one elevator ride before a meeting you haven't thought about.

Role: You get me ready for a meeting in ten minutes.

Context: The meeting: [what it's about]. Who's in the room and what each person cares about: [roles]. My goal, in one line: [what you want to walk out with]. Background: [paste notes or the last email, with client names and anything confidential taken out].

Task: Tell me the purpose of the meeting and what it needs from me. Give me the 3 points I have to land, the pushback I might get with a short response to each, and the one question that shows I've been thinking about this.

Format: Fits on a phone screen, so I can read it walking in: Goal, My 3 points, Likely pushback, My question.

57 The Rehearsal

The mom at work · Meetings

Use it when: The big conversation is Thursday, and the only practice you've had is in the shower.

Role: You play the other person in a hard work conversation, then coach me.

Context: The conversation: [raise, flexibility, pushing back on scope, feedback]. The other person: [their role, how they usually react]. What I want: [the outcome]. What I'm afraid they'll say: [your worry]. My opener so far: [or leave blank].

Task: First, tighten my opener, or write one if I left it blank. Then play the other person, realistically and a little tough, one reply at a time, and wait for my answer each round. After 4 rounds, stop and coach me on what landed, what to cut and where I over-explained.

Format: Short replies in character while we practice. Then a coaching note with three sections: Keep, Cut, Try this line instead.

58 The Notes-to-Next-Steps

The mom at work · Meetings

Use it when: The meeting ended, you have half a page of scribbles, and pickup is in 20 minutes.

Role: You turn rough meeting notes into a clean follow-up.

Context: Meeting: [what it was]. Who was there: [roles or first names]. My notes: [paste or dictate them, with client names and anything confidential taken out].

Task: Pull out decisions, action items with owners and dates, and open questions. If an owner or date is missing, write "not set" so I can see the gap. Don't fill in anything that isn't in my notes.

Format: A follow-up email I could send, under 120 words: Decided, Who's doing what by when, Still open. Above it, a separate list of what's on my plate.

59 The Meeting Audit

The mom at work · Meetings

Use it when: Tomorrow has six meetings and one lunch you'll eat at your desk.

Role: You look at a work calendar honestly and help me take back time without burning goodwill.

Context: My role: [your job in one line]. Tomorrow or this week: [paste the meetings, with who's in each by role, and client names taken out]. What I need time for: [the deep work or the deadline].

Task: Sort each meeting: I need to be there, I could send a note instead, it could be shorter, or someone else could go. Draft the message for each change. Give me a clear reason that's about the work.

Format: A table: meeting, your call, why. Then the drafted messages, two sentences each. You recommend, I decide.

Protecting Your Time

6 prompts

60 The No, Three Ways

The mom at work · Protecting Your Time

Use it when: You've rewritten this no four times, and the ask is still sitting there.

Role: You write short, confident professional messages for someone who has to say no and stay a team player.

Context: The ask: [what they want, from whom]. Why it's a no, or a not now: [the real reason, just for you]. What I could offer instead: [a smaller version, a later date, someone else, or nothing]. Our relationship: [boss, peer, client].

Task: Draft my reply. No over-apologizing. Don't mention my family unless I ask you to. Offer the alternative that keeps me a team player without keeping me at my desk.

Format: Three versions labeled Warm, Neutral and Firm, each under 60 words. Then tell me which you'd send and why.

61 The Hard Stop

The mom at work · Protecting Your Time

Use it when: The 5pm invite just landed again, and pickup is at 5:30.

Role: You help working parents hold their hours without making a speech about it.

Context: My hours: [when you stop, and when you're back online if you are]. What keeps happening: [late meetings, end-of-day asks]. Who's doing it: [role]. What I'm willing to offer: [earlier slot, async update, a morning call].

Task: Write a one-time reply for today. Then write a short standing note for my team about my hours, plus a line for my calendar and email signature if that fits our culture. Keep it matter-of-fact, with no reason given unless I add one.

Format: Three labeled pieces, each ready to copy: Reply for today, Team note under 50 words, Calendar line.

62 The Deadline Reset

The mom at work · Protecting Your Time

Use it when: It's Tuesday, it's due Thursday, and a sick kid ate the two days you needed.

Role: You help me renegotiate a deadline early and clearly.

Context: What's due: [the work and the date]. Where it really stands: [honest status]. What's realistic: [new date or smaller scope]. Who I'm telling: [role]. What's riding on it: [what depends on this].

Task: Write the message. Lead with what they'll get and when, and give two options if I can, like a partial version on the original date or the full version later. One line of reason at the most.

Format: Under 80 words, ready to send. Then a 2-sentence version for a hallway or chat message.

63 The Pattern Talk

The mom at work · Protecting Your Time

Use it when: This is the fourth late-notice ask this month, and one more polite reply won't fix it.

Role: You help me raise a pattern at work, calmly, with examples.

Context: The pattern: [what keeps happening]. Recent examples: [2 or 3 with rough dates, with client names and anything confidential taken out]. Who I need to talk to: [role]. What it's costing: [the work impact]. What I'm proposing instead: [your idea, or "help me come up with one"].

Task: Help me shape this as a conversation about how the work runs. Keep it factual. Write an opener, the examples in one or two sentences, what I'm proposing, and how to respond if they brush it off. Keep my family out of it unless I say otherwise.

Format: A short talk track I can read before the meeting: Opener, What I've noticed, What I'm proposing, If they push back. Then an email version requesting the conversation, under 50 words.

64 The Flexibility Request

The mom at work · Protecting Your Time

Use it when: You need 4pm on Tuesdays, and you've been waiting for a good time to ask for six months.

Role: You help me write a flexibility request that's built around the work.

Context: What I'm asking for: [the schedule or arrangement]. How long: [trial period or ongoing]. My role and what it needs: [key duties and who depends on you]. What's worked so far: [results, coverage, examples]. Written policy I know about: [paste it, or "not sure"].

Task: Write the request with the work first: what stays the same, how I'll stay reachable, how we'd measure it and when we'd review it. Suggest a trial period if I'm open to one. Don't tell me what I'm legally entitled to. If that question matters here, say to ask HR or an employment attorney. Use only what I've told you, and don't add numbers or targets.

Format: A one-page proposal, then a short email asking for time to talk about it. Then the 3 objections I'm most likely to hear, with a one-line response to each.

65 The Big-Day Sick Call

The mom at work · Protecting Your Time

Use it when: It's the morning of the presentation, and a kid just woke up sick.

Role: You help me handle a family emergency at work honestly and protect the relationship.

Context: What's happening today: [the meeting, launch, deadline]. Who's affected: [roles]. What I can still do from home: [the honest list]. Who could step in: [roles or first names]. Where the work stands: [what's ready].

Task: Write the note that tells them plainly, offers what I can still deliver, and proposes the next step. Write a handoff for whoever's covering. Say enough and stop. I want one sentence of reason, zero over-apologizing and no medical details.

Format: Three pieces, ready to copy: Note to the key person, Handoff to my backup, New time to offer. Each under 70 words.

Wins, Reviews and Your Next Move

6 prompts

66 The Friday Wins Line

The mom at work · Wins, Reviews and Your Next Move

Use it when: You fixed the thing no one else noticed was broken, and by Monday you won't remember it.

Role: You help me capture my work wins in one minute while I still remember them.

Context: This week at work: [talk it out, what you shipped, who you helped, what you fixed or prevented, with client names and anything confidential taken out].

Task: Turn this into one to three wins, each with what I did and what changed because of it. Ask me for a number only if one probably exists. Never add a number or result I didn't give you. Tell me if I'm underselling something.

Format: A dated list I can paste into a running doc. One line per win, impact first. Then one question that would make the strongest win stronger.

67 The Receipts Rebuild

The mom at work · Wins, Reviews and Your Next Move

Use it when: Review season is about to ask you to prove a year nobody wrote down.

Role: You help me rebuild a year of work from memory into a list of real, specific accomplishments.

Context: My role: [your job in one line]. Time period: [dates]. What I remember: [talk it out by project or by month, with client names and anything confidential taken out]. Where I can look: [calendar, sent mail, old decks].

Task: Interview me one question at a time, up to 8 questions, to pull out what I shipped, who I helped and what changed because of me. Then turn it into a list. For each item, tell me which number is missing and where I could find it. Frame leave and flexible hours as neutral facts, with no apology. Never add a number or result I didn't give you. If I give a rough number, mark it as my guess.

Format: A table: what I did, impact, number or "find this," where to look. Then my top 5. Remind me to cut anything that isn't mine to claim.

68 The Self-Assessment

The mom at work · Wins, Reviews and Your Next Move

Use it when: The review form is due Friday, and the box that says "describe your impact" has been blinking at you.

Role: You turn a list of work wins into a strong, honest self-assessment.

Context: Here are my wins: [paste your list, with client names and anything confidential taken out]. Here are the review questions: [paste them]. My level and what the next one expects: [paste your company's language if you have it]. How my company talks about this: [modest, metrics-heavy, narrative].

Task: Answer each question with impact first, using only my wins. Match my company's language where it fits. Keep it in the first person and sound like me. Where something is thin, say so and ask me for more.

Format: Each review question with a draft answer under the word limit [word limit, or 150 words]. Then a list of Claims to double-check before I submit.

69 The Promotion Case

The mom at work · Wins, Reviews and Your Next Move

Use it when: Your manager said "let's talk about next steps," and you want to walk in with more than a feeling.

Role: You build a clear promotion case from real evidence.

Context: Current role and target role: [titles]. What the target role expects: [paste the leveling guide or describe it]. My evidence: [paste your wins, with client names and anything confidential taken out]. Who decides: [roles]. Timing: [review cycle].

Task: Map my evidence to what the next level asks for, and show where I'm already doing the job and where there's a gap. Anticipate the pushback, like "not enough scope" or "timing," and arm me with responses. Use only evidence I gave you.

Format: A one-page case: The ask in one sentence, Evidence by requirement, Gaps and my plan, Likely pushback and responses. Then a 60-second spoken version.

70 The Interview Story

The mom at work · Wins, Reviews and Your Next Move

Use it when: A recruiter called, the interview is in three days, and you're wondering how to talk about the gap.

Role: You are an interview coach who helps experienced people tell their story with confidence.

Context: The role: [paste the job description, with the company name taken out if you prefer]. My background: [paste your resume, with address and phone number taken out]. Any gap or change I want to speak to: [the fact, in a sentence]. What I'm worried they'll ask: [your worry].

Task: Write my story in 90 seconds. Give me answers to the 5 questions I'm most likely to get, built only from my real experience. Treat a career gap as a fact and say it in one clean sentence. Give me 3 questions to ask them that signal seniority.

Format: Four sections: My 90 seconds, Likely questions, The gap in one sentence, My questions. Then offer to play the interviewer and coach me.

71 The Leave and Return Questions

The mom at work · Wins, Reviews and Your Next Move For your professional

Use it when: You're planning a leave, the policy PDF is 40 pages, and you're not sure who to ask what.

Role: You help me organize my questions about leave and return to work. You don't give legal, tax or benefits advice, and you don't tell me what I'm entitled to.

Context: What's coming: [leave or return, rough timing]. Here's the policy: [paste it, with your name and employee ID taken out]. What I already understand: [your read]. What I'm worried about: [pay, coverage, role, timing].

Task: Tell me in plain language what the document covers, and point to the sections I should read closely. Build a list of questions grouped by who should answer them: HR, my manager, my benefits provider, or an employment attorney if something looks unclear. List what I should get in writing.

Format: Three parts: What this covers, Questions by person, Dates to pin down. Then a short email asking HR for a time to talk.

Keeping Pace with AI

4 prompts

72 The Job Hand-Off Map

The mom at work · Keeping Pace with AI

Use it when: Your colleagues without kids are learning AI at night, and you have 20 minutes at lunch.

Role: You help a working mom see where AI fits in her real job. You're practical and you start small.

Context: My role: [your job in one line]. What fills my week: [the tasks you do on repeat]. What I hate doing: [the tasks you avoid]. What my company allows: [your AI policy, or "not sure"].

Task: Sort my tasks into three groups: AI could draft it and I'd review, AI could check it or find gaps, and it stays with me. Stay inside what my company allows, and if I don't know the rules, tell me to find out before pasting in company information. Pick the one task to try first. Say how long the first try might take.

Format: Three short lists, then Start here, with an example prompt for that one task using made-up details.

73 The 20-Minute Lesson

The mom at work · Keeping Pace with AI

Use it when: You have one lunch break and want to walk out knowing how to do one new thing with AI.

Role: You are a patient teacher who shows me how to use AI on a real task, one step at a time. No jargon, and no stupid questions.

Context: What I've done with AI so far: [nothing, a few questions, some regular use]. A real, non-confidential task from my work: [a task, with client names and anything confidential taken out]. I have [minutes].

Task: Teach me one skill using this task. Show me what to type, have me try it, then help me make it better. Give me one step at a time and wait for me to reply. At the end, tell me what I just learned in a sentence I could repeat to a coworker.

Format: Short messages, one step each. Finish with a reusable prompt for this task written in four parts: Role, Context, Task and Format.

74 The Plain-English Explainer

The mom at work · Keeping Pace with AI

Use it when: Someone said “agents” in the all-hands, and everyone nodded, including you.

Role: You explain AI terms in plain English to a smart professional who hasn’t had the hours to keep up.

Context: The term or idea: [what you heard]. Where I heard it: [meeting, email, article]. My role: [your job in one line].

Task: Explain what it means, what it looks like in a job like mine, and what people get wrong about it. Tell me one smart question I could ask at work. If you’re unsure this is current, say so.

Format: Under 150 words: What it is, What it looks like in my job, What people get wrong, One question to ask. No analogies unless they help.

75 The AI Policy Questions

The mom at work · Keeping Pace with AI

Use it when: Your team was told to “use AI more,” and nobody said what’s allowed.

Role: You help me find out what’s allowed at work before I use AI on company information. You don’t interpret policy or law for me.

Context: My role: [your job in one line]. What I’d like to use AI for: [tasks]. What I’ve been told so far: [paste the policy, or the message from leadership]. Who I’d ask: [manager, IT, legal, HR].

Task: List the questions I need answered: which tools are approved, what information can go in, what needs review, and whether I need to disclose AI use. Group them by who to ask. Write a short note to my manager that reads as curious and on top of things.

Format: A question list by person. Then the note, under 80 words.

ai.moms™

25 PROMPTS

The mompreneur

Your business gets the hour after everyone's asleep. These prompts are built for that hour.

The One Hour	4
Your Offer and Your Words	5
Customers	5
Getting Seen	5
Playbooks and Help	4
Questions for Your Pros	2

76 The One Hour Tonight

The mompreneur · The One Hour

Use it when: Everyone's asleep, you have one hour, and twelve things are on the business list.

Role: You help a mom running a business decide what gets her one hour tonight.

Context: My business: [what you sell, to whom]. What's on the list: [dump it all]. What's due or promised: [deadlines]. My energy tonight: [wiped, okay, wide awake]. Money comes in from: [what pays the bills].

Task: Pick the one job that matters most tonight and tell me why. Lean toward what brings in money or keeps a promise. Break it into steps that fit inside the hour. Tell me what I can let go of until tomorrow.

Format: The one job, the steps with minutes next to each, and a Not tonight list. Then ask if I want help starting the first step right now.

77 The Notes App Rescue

The mompreneur · The One Hour

Use it when: The idea has been in your Notes app for years, and tonight you finally opened it.

Role: You help turn a half-formed business idea into one small, testable next step.

Context: The idea: [paste your notes, as messy as they are]. Who it's for: [your best guess]. Why me: [what you know or have lived]. Time I have each week: [hours]. Money I could spend to test it: [amount or none].

Task: Tell me back what I'm actually proposing in two sentences. List what I'd need to believe for this to work. Give me the smallest test I could run this week with real people. Be honest about what's unclear.

Format: Three sections: The idea in two sentences, What has to be true, This week's test, with steps sized to my hours.

78 The Business Week

The mompreneur · The One Hour

Use it when: Soccer moved to Tuesday, and your one clear work block just vanished.

Role: You plan a small business week around the family calendar.

Context: This week's family schedule: [the hours you really have, by day, first initials only]. What the business needs this week: [orders, clients, posts, admin]. Deadlines: [dates]. Best hours for me: [when you think clearly].

Task: Match each business job to a real slot in my week. Put the thinking work in my best hours and the admin in the leftovers. If it won't all fit, tell me what to cut or push and why.

Format: A day-by-day list with the time slot and one job per slot. Then Doesn't fit this week. Mark the one job that would make the week a success.

79 The Business Friday Sweep

The mompreneur · The One Hour

Use it when: It's Friday, an invoice is unsent, two people are waiting on you, and you can't remember the third.

Role: You close out a small business week so nothing owed slips into next week unnoticed.

Context: Sent or finished this week: [what got done]. Still open: [unsent invoices, unanswered customers, follow-ups, half-done posts]. Next week's first priority: [your guess].

Task: Sort what's open into what brings in money, what keeps a promise, and everything else. Draft any quick replies or follow-ups I can send now. Pick what I'm allowed to let go of. Write my first move for next week.

Format: Three short lists, the drafted messages with blanks for names, then Monday's first move. I read and send everything myself.

Your Offer and Your Words

5 prompts

80 The Interview-First Draft

The mompreneur · Your Offer and Your Words

Use it when: You've rewritten this page five times, and it sounds like someone else's business.

Role: You are a patient interviewer who gets a business owner talking, then writes in her words.

Context: What I need written: [website page, email, bio, sales page]. Who it's for: [your customer]. Anything I've already written: [paste it, or "nothing yet"].

Task: Interview me one question at a time about what I sell, who buys it, and what I'd say to her across a table. Ask up to 7 questions and wait for each answer. Use my actual phrases. Then write the first draft. Use only what I've told you. No invented numbers, customer stories or results.

Format: One question per message. Then the draft, followed by a list of the phrases you kept from my answers and any claim I should double-check.

81 The One-Sentence Offer

The mompreneur · Your Offer and Your Words

Use it when: Someone at pickup asked what you do, and you heard yourself talk for three minutes.

Role: You help small business owners say what they sell in one clear sentence.

Context: What I sell: [your product or service]. Who it's for: [your customer]. What it changes for her: [before and after, in plain words]. How I explain it now: [your current version].

Task: Write 5 one-sentence versions that a friend could repeat to someone else. Use plain words. Cut anything that sounds like a brochure. Tell me which one is clearest and what it leaves out.

Format: Five numbered sentences, each under 20 words. Then a version for talking, a version for my bio, and your pick.

82 The About Page

The mompreneur · Your Offer and Your Words

Use it when: You have to write your About page, and writing about yourself makes you want to reorganize the garage.

Role: You write About pages that start with the customer and sound like a real person.

Context: My business: [what you sell, to whom]. How it started: [the real story, talk it out]. What I believe that others in my field don't: [your opinion]. Who I am: [only what you want public]. What I want a reader to do next: [book, buy, join].

Task: Write the page. Open on her and her problem, then bring in my story. Keep what's specific and cut anything that could be on anyone's page. Use only what I've told you. No invented numbers, customer stories or results.

Format: Under 250 words with 2 or 3 short sections. Then a two-line version for social bios. Leave out my kids' names and anything I didn't say I want public.

83 The Real-Questions FAQ

The mompreneur · Your Offer and Your Words

Use it when: You've answered the same question in your inbox six times this week.

Role: You turn the questions customers really ask into clear answers.

Context: My business: [what you sell, to whom]. Questions I keep getting: [paste them, or paste emails and DMs with customer names taken out]. Policies: [shipping, refunds, scheduling, as they are today].

Task: Group the questions and answer each one in my voice. Answer the worry behind the question, too. If you don't know a policy or a fact, leave a blank for me. Don't make up terms.

Format: An FAQ with up to 10 questions, answers under 50 words. Then a short reusable reply for the top 3, for email or DMs.

84 The Customer Conversation Script

The mompreneur · Your Offer and Your Words

Use it when: You're about to spend three months building something, and you haven't asked anyone if they want it.

Role: You help a founder learn from real customers without pitching them.

Context: What I'm thinking of building or changing: [the idea]. Who I'd talk to: [the kind of customer]. What I'm unsure about: [what you need to learn].

Task: Write a 15-minute conversation guide. Ask about what she does now and what it costs her in time or money, and keep my idea out of it until the end. Write a short invite message. Tell me what would count as a yes and what would count as a no.

Format: Three parts: The invite, under 40 words, The questions, no more than 8, What to listen for. Add a simple notes template I can reuse across 5 conversations.

85 The Follow-Up

The mompreneur · Customers

Use it when: She said "sounds great, let me think about it" two weeks ago, and you've been too polite to check in.

Role: You write short follow-ups that are easy to answer and don't grovel.

Context: What I offered: [product or service]. Where we left it: [the last conversation]. What I know she cares about: [her situation, no full names]. How many times I've followed up: [number].

Task: Write the follow-up. Remind her of the one thing she cared about. Make it easy to say yes, no or not now. Add something useful if there's something real to add.

Format: Three versions under 50 words: a gentle check-in, one with a clear next step, and a last note that closes the loop kindly.

86 The Late-Invoice Note

The mompreneur · Customers

Use it when: The invoice is 30 days late, you're annoyed, and you still like this client.

Role: You write polite, firm payment reminders that keep the relationship.

Context: What it's for: [the work]. Amount and due date: [amount, date]. Reminders so far: [how many]. My payment terms: [as written in your agreement]. The relationship: [new client, longtime client].

Task: Write the next reminder. Keep it clear and friendly, with the amount, the date and how to pay. No legal threats, and don't state any late fee that isn't in my terms. If this has gone on for a long time, tell me this may be one for an attorney or accountant, in one line, and give no legal advice.

Format: Three versions from friendly to firm, each under 70 words, with blanks for the client's name and the payment link.

87 The Simple Proposal

The mompreneur · Customers

Use it when: A good lead just asked for a proposal, and you have one evening to get it to her.

Role: You write short, clear proposals for solo business owners.

Context: The client's situation: [what she told you, no full names]. What I'd do: [the work, in plain words]. Timeline: [dates]. Price: [your price, you decide this]. What's not included: [limits]. A past project that's similar: [only if real].

Task: Write the proposal. Open with her situation in her words, then what I'll do, how it works, what it costs and the next step. Keep the scope clear so it doesn't grow later. Use only what I've told you. No invented numbers, customer stories or results.

Format: One page: Where you are, What we'll do, Timeline, Price, Next step. Then a short email to send with it. Remind me to have a lawyer look at any contract language before I use it.

88 The Review Ask

The mompreneur · Customers

Use it when: A customer just told you she loves it, and you froze instead of asking her to say so publicly.

Role: You help small business owners ask real customers for honest feedback.

Context: What she bought: [product or service]. What she said: [her words, as close as you can get]. Where I'd use a review: [website, listing, social]. How well I know her: [close or not].

Task: Write the ask. Make it quick, with one or two easy questions she can answer in her own words. Ask her permission to share, and how she'd like to be credited. Never write the review for her, and never suggest what she should say.

Format: A text version and an email version, each under 60 words. Then 2 simple questions I can include.

89 The Hard Customer Reply

The mompreneur · Customers

Use it when: The angry email landed at bath time, and you'd like to reply to it as your best self.

Role: You help a business owner answer an upset customer calmly.

Context: What she wrote: [paste it, with her name taken out]. What happened on my side: [your honest version]. What I'm willing to do: [refund, redo, nothing further; this is your call]. My policy: [what it says].

Task: Write the reply. Acknowledge what's real, say what I can do, and give the next step. Don't admit fault I don't agree with, and don't argue. If she mentions a chargeback, a lawyer or a safety issue, tell me to get professional advice before I reply.

Format: Two versions under 100 words, one warmer and one firmer. Then one line on what to do if she writes back upset.

90 The Customer-Question Post

The mompreneur · Getting Seen

Use it when: A customer asked a great question today, and it's the post you should have written a year ago.

Role: You turn a real customer question into a post that sounds like the person who answered it.

Context: The question: [what she asked, no names]. My answer, the way I'd say it out loud: [talk it out]. Who I'm writing for: [your customer]. Where it's going: [Instagram, LinkedIn, Facebook group, email].

Task: Write the post. Open on her moment or her words. Keep my phrasing. Make one point. End with a clear next step that fits what I sell. Use only what I've told you. No invented numbers, customer stories or results.

Format: One post sized for that platform, plus 3 alternative first lines. No hashtag piles, no emoji rows.

91 The Month of Post Ideas

The mompreneur · Getting Seen

Use it when: You're tired of opening your phone at 9pm with nothing to post.

Role: You plan a month of content from what a business owner already knows.

Context: My business: [what you sell, to whom]. Questions customers ask: [a few]. What I'm selling this month: [your focus]. Dates that matter: [launches, seasons, events]. Where I post and how often I can really do it: [platforms, posts per week].

Task: Give me a month of post ideas sized to what I said I can do. Every idea comes from a real customer question, a moment from my work, or what I'm selling. Say which ones need a photo or video. Use only what I've told you. No invented numbers, customer stories or results.

Format: A table by week: date, idea in one line, first line of the post, what's needed. Then the two I should write first.

92 One Recording, Four Pieces

The mompreneur · Getting Seen

Use it when: You talked through a great idea in the car, and it'll disappear by dinner.

Role: You turn one voice note or transcript into several pieces of content that keep my voice.

Context: My recording or transcript: [paste it, or dictate it now]. My customer: [who you're writing for]. Where I post: [platforms]. What I want people to do next: [your call to action].

Task: Pull out the strongest idea. Turn it into four pieces: a short video script, a post with slides, a text post and an email. Keep my phrases and cut the rambling. Each piece should work without the others. Use only what I've told you. No invented numbers, customer stories or results.

Format: Four labeled pieces. Video script under 60 seconds. Slides as one idea per slide, up to 6 slides. Text post under 150 words. Email under 150 words with a subject line.

93 The Newsletter Note

The mompreneur · Getting Seen

Use it when: Your list hasn't heard from you since spring, and now it feels awkward.

Role: You write short email newsletters that read like a note from a person.

Context: My business: [what you sell, to whom]. One thing on my mind this week: [talk it out]. One useful thing I could give them: [something they can use today]. One offer or link: [what you want them to do].

Task: Write one email with one topic. Open on a real moment. Give the useful thing. Put the ask last, and only one. If it's been a while, say so in a line and move on. Use only what I've told you. No invented numbers, customer stories or results.

Format: Three subject lines, then the email under 200 words, written so it sounds like me.

94 The Launch Backward Plan

The mompreneur · Getting Seen

Use it when: You told people it's coming in six weeks, and now it's on the calendar for real.

Role: You plan small launches backward from the date, sized to a mom with limited hours.

Context: What I'm launching: [product, service, class]. Launch date: [date]. Price: [your price]. Hours I have per week: [hours]. My audience today: [email list, social, past customers, as they are]. Done so far: [what's ready].

Task: Work backward from launch day. Give me weekly jobs that fit my hours, in order: what has to exist, who to tell first, what to write and when to send it. Start with personal messages to people who already know me. If it doesn't fit my hours, say what to cut. Don't predict sales.

Format: A week-by-week checklist with hours next to each job. Then a Must exist before launch list. Then a short personal message to send my first 10 people.

Playbooks and Help

4 prompts

95 The Client Onboarding Playbook

The mompreneur · Playbooks and Help

Use it when: Every new client gets a slightly different welcome, depending on how the week is going.

Role: You turn what a business owner does in her head into a repeatable playbook.

Context: What I sell: [your service or product]. What happens from yes to first delivery: [talk it through, every step]. Where things live: [tools and folders, no passwords]. What goes wrong: [the usual snags].

Task: Ask up to 5 questions about the gaps. Then write the playbook so someone else could run it. Draft the welcome email and the one checklist the client needs from me.

Format: A numbered playbook: step, who, when, what done looks like. Then the welcome email under 120 words with blanks for names. Then the client checklist.

96 The Helper Brief

The mompreneur · Playbooks and Help

Use it when: You finally have a few hours of help, and you're spending them explaining things.

Role: You write clear briefs so a part-time helper can do a job without asking me ten questions.

Context: The job: [what you're handing off]. Who's doing it: [role, experience]. How I do it now: [walk through it]. What good looks like: [an example]. Hours and deadline: [hours, due date]. What needs my OK first: [anything touching money or a customer].

Task: Write the brief. Include the steps, the standard, where to find things, what to do when stuck, and what must come to me before it goes out. Leave out passwords and customer details. List what I'd need to set up before they start.

Format: One page: The job, Steps, What good looks like, Check with me before, When you're stuck. Then a list called Set up first.

97 The Customer Reply Assistant

The mompreneur · Playbooks and Help

Use it when: You answer the same five kinds of messages every day, always in a different mood.

Role: You help me write instructions for an assistant that drafts my customer replies.

Context: My business: [what you sell, to whom]. The messages I get most: [paste 5 examples, with customer names taken out]. How I reply when I'm at my best: [paste 2 or 3 of your own replies, with customer names taken out]. Policies: [refunds, shipping, scheduling]. What it should never handle: [complaints, discounts, anything you want to see first].

Task: Study how I write. Then write assistant instructions in four parts: Role, Context, Task and Format. The instructions must say it only drafts, and that I approve every reply. Tell it to flag anything about money, refunds or an upset customer.

Format: One block of instructions I can paste into a Project or custom instructions. Then three test messages to try it on, and what to look for in each reply.

98 The Scope-Creep Reply

The mompreneur · Playbooks and Help

Use it when: "One more quick thing" just became the fourth quick thing this month.

Role: You help a business owner hold scope and hours while keeping the client happy.

Context: What we agreed to: [the scope, as written]. What she's asking for now: [the request]. My hours or response times: [what you've told clients]. What I'd charge for the extra: [your price, you decide this]. The client: [how long you've worked together, no full names].

Task: Write the reply. Be glad to help, name that this is outside what we agreed, and give her two options: add it for a price, or swap it for something in scope. Write a short line I can add to future agreements so it's clear up front.

Format: Warm and Firm versions, under 80 words each. Then the line for future agreements, and a reminder to have a lawyer look at contract changes.

Questions for Your Pros

2 prompts

99 The Accountant Questions

The mompreneur · Questions for Your Pros For your professional

Use it when: You have a shoebox of receipts, a meeting with the accountant, and 45 minutes of her time.

Role: You help me get organized for a meeting with my accountant. You don't give tax or financial advice, and you don't tell me what I can deduct or what I owe.

Context: My business: [what you sell, how it's set up if you know]. What changed this year: [new income, equipment, helpers, a move]. What confuses me: [your questions, messy is fine]. What I have on hand: [receipts, spreadsheets, statements, with no account numbers].

Task: Turn my worries into clear questions, in priority order. Group them by topic. List what I should gather and bring. Tell me which of my questions may belong with a different professional, such as an attorney or a financial planner.

Format: One page: My questions, in priority order, Bring with me, and Not for this meeting. Add a blank section for What they said and What I do next.

100 The Lawyer Questions

The mompreneur · Questions for Your Pros For your professional

Use it when: You've got a contract to sign, a name to protect, and a consult that bills by the hour.

Role: You help me prepare for a meeting with an attorney. You don't give legal advice, and you don't tell me what a contract means for me or whether to sign it.

Context: My business: [what you sell, how it's set up if you know]. What I need help with: [contract, business structure, trademark, terms for my site]. Background: [the short version]. Paperwork: [paste it, with names and account numbers taken out, or just list what you have].

Task: List the terms I should ask about in plain words. Turn my situation into clear questions, most urgent first. Write a short summary of the facts I can send ahead of time so we don't spend paid minutes on background. Don't guess at the law.

Format: One page: Facts summary under 100 words, My questions, Terms to ask about, What to bring. Add a blank section for What I do next.